1 Rembrandt, Van Rhyn (after)

Rembrandt's Daughter

The original is in the Dresden Gallery.

2* Pannini, Cav. Giovanni Paolo Roman School

Runis of the Arch of Titus in Rome

Born at Piacenza in 1691, Pannini went at an early age to Rome, where he studied perspective under Pietro Luca-telli, and applied himself in designing the monuments of ancient architecture in the vicinity of that capital. He died at Rome in 1764.

3 Farber, J. F. E.

Portrait

Christian William Ernst Dietrich was born at Weimar in 1712 and died at Dresden in 1774.

5 Heinz, J. (after) run

Lot and His Daughters

Original in the Dresden Gallery.

6* Carracci, Ludovico

Bolognese School

Christ and the Samaritan Woman run

Represents the well-known scene at Jacob's Well. Luke IV, v. 6-26. A scholar of Fontana and Tintoretto, Ludovico Carracci became the founder of the most important of the Eclectic Schools of Bologna. His style has been considered by several of the best judges of the art, as that which approaches nearest perfection. He was born at Bologna in 1555, and died in 1619.

7 Poussin, Nicholas French School
Landscape Near Rome

Poussin, a leading master of the French School of Art, is celebrated for his landscapes with scriptural and classical figures. He was born at Andely, in Normandy, in 1594, and died at Rome in 1665, at the advanced age of seventy-one.

8* Potter, Paul (1625-1654) Dutch School
Landscape with Animals

9 Hemskerk, Egbert, The Younger Dutch School
Portrait

This artist was born at Harlem in 1645, and is said to have been a scholar of Peter Grebber. He painted scenes of drunken revelry with considerable humor, and sometimes represented incantations, spectres and similar subjects with ready invention and ingenuity. He was well patronized in England, and died in London in 1704.

10 Beerstraten, T. Van Dutch School
Winter Landscape in Holland

11 Beerestraten, A. Van Dutch School
A Castle in Holland

The works of Beerestraten are very scarce. Some of his best, representing views of Dutch and Italian seaports, are in the Museum at Antwerp and the Gallery at Dresden.

12 Ruysdael, Jacob Dutch School
Waterfall

This artist, justly considered one of the most eminent landscape painters of the Dutch School, was born at Harlem about 1636, and is said to have received his earliest instruction from Nicholas Berghem. He died at Harlem in 1681.

The Anabaptists

In front of his dwelling, in Munster, Johann von Leyden is baptizing the daughter of his prophet, Dusentschuer, whom he afterwards married. On his left stand his co-regents: Rollman, the priest, holding the book, "de libertate Christiana," under his arm, and Knipperdolling, in executioner's garb, with sword. Behind these appear two of his twelve dukes, the co-regents of the world. In the foreground, a kneeling monk, seized with fanaticism, is pressing forward to the anabaptism. In obedience to the king's command, that all gold and silver is to be delivered up to him, a maiden is bringing her trinkets and valuables to lay at the sovereign's feet. Attired in her white baptismal robes, Dusentschuer's daughter, the picture of innocence and devotion, kneels before Johann, and receives upon her bowed head the water of anabaptism. The boy, holding the vessel of water, was a natural son of the Bishop of Munster, and in his captivity served as page to the king. His garments are blue and brown, to typify that his king is Lord of Heaven and Earth. Behind the maiden kneels Dusentschuer, the second John the Baptist. Instead of a sheepskin, a wolfskin covers his shoulders, and on his banner is inscribed the sanguinary motto of the Anabaptists: "dat Korf is Flesch worden." By his side appears Hilla, the new Judith, in a state of ecstasy. Behind her follows groups of the people, representing Stupidity, Remorse, Indolence, and Anguish of Mind. Armed men mingle in the crowd, for the protection of the newly established Zion. Albot, Burgomaster of Munster, and his wife, both heartily grieved at the new regime of the fanatics, are seen at the window immediately overlooking this scene. The Ludgheri Church is visible in the background, but as if to carry out the words of Scripture, that whatsoever exalteth itself shall be humbled, its spire is broken. Pictures and books are being burned in the square in front of the church, for New Zion has her King and her Prophets.

The above description of the painting—"The Anabaptists"—was written by the poet Julius Mosen.

22 Van Oer, Theobald Dresden

Flight of Maria D'Este, Queen of James II of England, from Whitehall

"Maria Beatrice d'Este, Princess of Modena, was only fifteen years old, and remarkably beautiful, when married to James II, then old enough to be her grandfather, and was to him through all the troubles and vicissitudes of her later fortunes, the most tender and devoted wife."

This beautiful picture represents her flight from Whitehall with her infant son on the night of December 13th, 1688. But a small group of trusty adherents are present to witness the sad scene. Supported by the hand of the French Duc de Lauzun, the Queen is about to step into the open boat, but turns her beautiful face to look a last farewell upon the palace that will henceforth know her sweet presence no more. The royal babe is borne behind her, and leaning against a pillar, the "ancient servitor" covers his face.

45 Snyders, Francis

Flemish School

Still Life

This distinguished artist, who was born at Antwerp in 1579, confined himself for some time entirely to painting fruit and objects of still life, in which he excelled; but later devoted himself to animals and hunting scenes, which he painted with a fire and spirit unequalled by any master who has succeeded him. Snyders died at Antwerp in 1657.

Cattle Market

This admired painter was born at Harlem in 1620, and died at the same place in 1668. His pictures usually represent hawking parties, halts of travelers, encampments, horse fairs, and all subjects into which he could introduce horses, which he treated with unequalled spirit and correctness.

53 Dietrich, Franz

Dresden

Oedipus and Antigone

On discovery that he had been guilty of the double crime of parricide and incest, Oedipus in horror put out his eyes and exiled himself. Led by his daughter, Antigone, he proceeds to the grove of the Furies at Colones, where, amid thunder-peals, he is removed from earth.

Advancing along a dreary and rocky road, Antigone, in a white garment almost completely covered by violet drapery, which veils without concealing her beautiful form, is putting aside the briars from her father's path with the wand in her right hand; her head is turned towards Oedipus, who on his daughter's left side and holding her hand, advances with bowed head and the slow, uncertain step of blindness. The dark red drapery of Oedipus contrasts admirably with his silvery, flowing hair and beard.

Trial of Charles the First of England

"On the 20th of January, 1649, the sittings of the tribunal were opened with great ceremony at Westminster Hall, and although the king steadily denied the authority of his judges, they sentenced him to death on the 27th of January, as a 'Murderer, Tyrant, and Enemy of the People.'"

Never have the misfortunes of a prince furnished more themes for poet and painter, than those of him who has been alternately represented as a royal martyr, or an execrable tyrant. But the calm dignity with which he bore his misfortunes, his unaffected piety and his attachment to the church, must win for him the respect of even those most opposed to him in politics and religion.

Adrian Van de Velde was born at Amsterdam in 1639. "He was a scholar of Jan Wynants, and ranks almost as high as Paul Potter; for if inferior to him in the energy of conception displayed in his cattle, in plastic modeling and breadth of solid execution, he excels him in variety of subject, in taste for composition, delicacy of drawing, and in a certain warmth and sweetness of feeling." He has, however, this in common with Paul Potter—that he was a distinguished artist by the age of fourteen, and that he died young, namely, at the age of thirty-two.

But little is known of the private history of this able artist. He was of Flemish origin, and was born about the year 1600. He studied in the school of Rubens, but consequently adopted the manner of Rembrandt, and so closely does he approach that master that many works attributed to Rembrandt, doubtless owe their paternity to Jan Victor, and only a duly qualified connoisseur can discriminate between the two. Victor, or as he sometimes signed his pictures, Fictoor, usually chose his subjects from the Old Testament. He died about 1670.

Paul Palamedes Staevaerts, or Palamedes, as he is usually called, was born in London in 1607, but returned at an early age with his father to Holland. After acquiring an elementary knowledge of art, he improved himself by studying the works of Esais Vandervelde, copying with great success, that master's clear and transparent style of coloring, and like him, painted battles, skirmishes, attacks of robbers, etc., with great success. He died in 1638, in the prime of life; but not before he had acquired a distinguished reputation among the artists of his native country.

- 92 Fontana, Lavinia Bolognese School
Madonna and Child

A beautiful picture by this eminent artist, the daughter and pupil of Prospero Fontana. She was born at Bologna in 1552. Lauzi says that she possessed wonderful sweetness of penciling, particularly after she had studied the works of the Caracci, and that some of her portraits might have passed for those of Guido. She died at Rome in 1614.

Pieter de Wit, or Witte, called Pietro Candido, a painter, sculptor and architect was born at Bruges in 1548. After studying in his native city he went to Italy, where he formed an intimacy with Giorgi Vasari, whom he assisted in his works at the Vatican. From Italy he repaired, at the invitation of Maximilian I, Elector of Bavaria, to Munich, where he spent the remainder of his life. Under the arcade of the Long Gallery of the Hofgarten, in that city, he painted a series of frescoes, representing the deeds of Otto von Wittelsbach, and the Departure of the Emperor Ludwig from Rome in 1327. Although these paintings are now defaced, the designs are preserved in the tapestries worked from them, and in the prints engraved from the tapestries by Amling. The exact date of De Witte's death is not known, but it probably occurred about 1620.

Born at Leyden in 1494, "he followed that realistic tendency, in the treatment of sacred subjects, which Huber van Eyck had so grandly tracked, and lowered it greatly from its previous elevation. His heads, for instance, are generally of a very ugly character; at the same time, his form of art found sympathy in the feeling of the period." He died in 1533.

Guido Reni, the greatest of the scholars of the Caracci, was born at Bologna in 1575. "His earlier pictures display a striving after the grand and terrible, with a powerful effect of light and shadow, similar to that observed in the works of Caravaggio; but his later style, by which he is best known, is remarkable for its sweetness and tenderness. His heads show the influence of a careful study of the antique." Guido died in 1642.

St. Joseph

Albert Durer, the painter of this head of St. Joseph and its companion picture, "The Virgin Mary," was born at Nurnberg in 1471. He distinguished himself in youth by his exquisite carvings, and subsequently adopted painting as his profession. Albert Durer has been styled the father of the German School of Painting and the Prince of Artists. He died in 1528.

This artist, a pupil of Henry Steenwyck, painted like his master most exquisite interiors of churches and temples. "Such was his knowledge of perspective, that he was accustomed to paint, in the small space of a cabinet picture, the largest and most magnificent gothic edifices, in so masterly a manner as to delude the spectator into the belief of the reality of the immense space the building represents." He was born in 1570 and died in 1651.

Magdalena 1611-1651

Josef Ribera, called Il Spagnoletto, was born at Xativa in 1589. In due time he became a pupil of Caravaggio, whose powerful and effective style possessed a particular attraction for Ribera. "His genius led him to paint gloomy and austere subjects, which were peculiarly acceptable to the Neapolitans and Spaniards, such as hermits and saints emancipated by abstinence and severity." Ribera died at Naples in 1656.

Bernardino Luini was born at Luino, on Lago Maggiore, about the year 1480. He was a disciple of Leonardo da Vinci, and the most celebrated imitator of that master's style. Some uncertainty exists concerning the exact date of his death, but it was subsequent to the year 1530. Professor Ruskin said of Luini, in his Oxford Lecture on Sculpture, that "he alone of mediaeval artists could combine beauty and saintliness."

Ulrich Von Hutten, born in Hesse Cassel, in the year 1488, was placed at the age of eleven in the monastery of Fulda, with the intention of his becoming a monk. When fifteen he ran away from the cloister to the University of Erfurt, where he joined the anti-monkish party. He subsequently became a great scholar and reformer. He died in Switzerland in 1523. No. 30 represents him seeking the refuge provided for him by Zwinglius, in the house of a clergyman named Schuegg, on the Island of Ufuan, in the Lake of Zurich.

This artist was born at Antwerp in 1615, and received his first art instruction from his father, who was considered the ablest landscape painter of his time. Young Ryckaert soon rose to distinction and enjoyed the special favor of Archduke Leopold, who appointed him in 1651 Director of the Academy at Antwerp. He usually painted peasant festivals, musical parties or the interiors of chemists' laboratories. David Ryckaert's pictures are not often met with out of Belgium, where they are to be found in the best collections. He died in 1677.

He was successively the scholar of Bellini, Georgioni and Michel Angelo Buonaroti, and after the death of Raffaele, he was reputed the most distinguished artist in Rome. He died in 1547.

Giacomo da Ponte, usually called Il Bassano, was born at Bassano in 1510. He first studied under his father, Francesco, who was the founder of a school bearing his name; later, in Venice, under Bonifazio Veneziani. He is supposed by some to have been a pupil of Titian, but this is doubtful, although at one time he was a close follower of that master's style. After acquiring considerable celebrity in Venice, his father's death compelled him to return

This eminent portrait painter was born in Westphalia in 1617. On the death of Van Dyck in 1640, he determined to visit England, where he soon acquired high favor and distinction. Through William, Prince of Orange, he was introduced to the notice of Charles I, whose portrait he painted, as well as those of the Prince and Princess of Orange. Through all the tragical events that followed, Sir Peter Lely remained in England, his fame unimpaired. Cromwell sat to him, and after the Restoration, he had the honor of painting King Charles II, by whom he was knighted. Sir Peter died in 1680 and was buried in Convent Garden, where a monument with his bust, by Gibbon, is erected in his memory.

This artist was born in 1599 in the vicinity of Antwerp. The scholar and able disciple of Gerald Seghers, he left that master to pursue his studies in Rome at the Academy of Andrea Sacchi. His best performances are his easel pictures, representing fairs, huntings, markets and carnival festivities. He was a favorite of Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, who invited him to the Court of Turin, and conferred upon him the order of the Knighthood of St. Maurice. He died in 1664.

The Patriotic Race

No. 7 represents an incident of the American Revolution. While both armies were encamped near the Potomoc, the English officers gave a ball to the ladies of the vicinity. In the course of the evening a young American girl happened to overhear a whispered conversation between two officers relating to movements of the army and some important dispatches on the subject, which were to be forwarded that night by special messenger to a commanding officer stationed at some distance. Understanding of what immense advantage the possession of these papers would be to her countrymen, the young girl instantly formed a heroic resolution. Slipping into the kitchen, she managed to divert the attention of the messenger while she abstracted the dispatch bag, then hurrying to the stable she mounted the horse, which stood ready saddled for the British soldier, and behold her galloping towards the American encampment. In short time the important theft is discovered and an English officer starts in pursuit of the fugitive. Just at sunrise he overtakes her—another moment and her heroic act had been in vain, but American tents are gleaming in the distance, an American soldier is already by her side. In the ardor of his exciting chase, the Englishman has, unnoticed, passed the lines of the hostile encampment; at the sharp tone of the American soldier, he now wheels about with an angry oath, and, thanks to his brave steed alone, makes good his escape to the British lines.

The Love Chase

It was customary with the Arabs, when a young man wooed the daughter of a Sheik, that the father should give his best horse to the maiden, and another to her suitor. If the girl was favorably disposed toward the intended bridegroom, she would rein in her steed, thus giving him an opportunity of overtaking her; if, on the contrary, she disliked him, she urged her horse to its utmost speed. This picture represents a fair lady, evidently extremely willing to be captured, and giving her lover every possible opportunity of winning the prize. In the background are seated the respective fathers of the young couple, while, according to Arab custom, a camel stands ready to carry home the bride.

Domenico Zampieri, called Il Domenichino, was born at Bologna in 1581. He was a fellow student of Guido and Albano in the Academy of the Caracci, where he soon distinguished himself greatly. Together with Albano, he afterwards visited Parma, Modena and Reggio, to study the works of Correggio and Parmegiano; and on their return they both finally settled in Rome. Domenichino's Communion of St. Jerome, painted for the principal altar of S. Girolamo della Carita, was considered the finest picture at Rome, after the Transfiguration, by Raffaele. He died in 1641.

390* Van Dyck, Sir A. (1599-1641) Antwerp

The Epiphany, or Adoration of the Three Kings

The church yearly celebrates this, almost the first event in the human life of the infant Savior. The Magi, or, as tradition has it, the "Three Kings," having seen His star in the east, have come to worship Him and bring gifts, "gold, frankincense and myrrh." In the center of the picture, clad in an ermine mantle, his jeweled turban lying at his feet, sits one of the kings, tenderly holding the divine infant, whom he has just received from the arms of the Virgin. Close beside him, to the right, the second king, a Moor, is bending down to present his offering, and behind him appears the figure of the other king. To the left, in scarlet robe and dark drapery, stands the blessed mother, contemplating her son, and quite in the background appears the head of St. Joseph, while some figures—attendants of the Magi—fill up the center of the background. There is infinite grace and simplicity in the expression and attitude of the blessed Virgin, and the head of the king holding the infant is full of wonderful dignity, individuality and veneration. The paintings of Vandyck are very numerous, notwithstanding the shortness of his career.

some of which have been mistaken for works of that master. The Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, which he painted for the Church of the Jesuits at Bruges, is considered his finest work. The time of his death seems to be somewhat uncertain, but it is generally placed about the year 1676

The Mandolin Player

This celebrated portrait and historical painter was born at Mechlin in 1584, and was a disciple of Karel van Mander. Few painters have equaled Hals in his particular department, and of the numerous artists of his country he has only been surpassed in it by Vandyck. His coloring is chaste, and at the same time vigorous, and his heads are full of life and character. It was the opinion of Vandyck that no artist would have equaled him in his profession if he could have given more tenderness to his coloring.

Grand Canyon of the Sierras—Yosemite Valley, California

Thomas Hill was born in Birmingham, England, in 1829. His family came to America in 1840, and settled at Taunton, Mass. He early showed artistic talent, his first important work being painted in Philadelphia in 1853, at which time he was a member of the old Graphic Club and also of the Academy, studying in the life class, of which Rothermel was president. In 1853 he took his first medal at the Maryland Institute, Baltimore. In 1861, he came to California for the benefit of his health. Opening a studio in San Francisco, he took the first prize of the Art Union for his "Trial Scene in the Merchant of Venice." He went to Paris in 1866, and studied with Paul Meyerheim, after which he devoted himself almost exclusively to landscape. Taking up his residence in Boston in 1867, he painted several notable pictures, amongst others "The Yosemite Valley" and "White Mountain Notch." Ill health compelled him to return to California, where he was soon able to resume the successful career began in the East. At the Centennial Exposition, Philadelphia, 1876, he was awarded the first medal for landscape painting, the subjects being "Donner Lake" and "Yosemite Valley" which are now in the gallery of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University. Another of his best works, "The Great Canon of the Sierras," is in the Crocker Gallery (No. 423). This picture gained the New York Palette Club medal. In addition to these honors, Mr. Hill has received a number of other medals.

Norwegian Coast by Moonlight

Andreas Achenbach was born at Hesse Cassel in 1815. In 1827 he became a pupil of Sehimer, the professor of landscape at the Dusseldorf Academy, and acquired in a few years a high rank as an architectural landscape painter. "A coasting voyage which he made with his father in 1832 and 1833, by way of Rotterdam, Scheveningen and Amsterdam, to Hamburg, and thence to Riga, opened new fields for the exercise of his pencil in the grand wilderness and magnificent surging of the Northern Sea, his acquaintance with which he two years afterwards matured and extended by an expedition to Denmark, Norway and Sweden." He subsequently traveled in the Tyrol, and in 1843 went to Italy, where he remained two years. "His pictures are characterized by the charm of never ending variety, grand mountain passes and lovely home idylls, the solitary fiord, forest lands, waterfalls and marine views with shipping, all seem under diverse aspects of season—some by day, others by moonlight. To sum up, the tendency of Achenbach's genius is realistic in the highest and best sense of the word." Foremost among his scholars are his brother Oswald and A. Flamm-Andreas. Achenbach obtained the great gold medals of Belgium and Prussia and the small one of France. He is also Knight of the Belgium Order of Leopold, and a member of the academies of Berlin, Amsterdam and Antwerp. Died 1905.

434 Dietrich, Franz Dresden
Proclamation of Peace After the Thirty Years' War

A composition containing about seventy figures in the foreground and on the sides, besides an immense number more indistinctly seen in the distance. Young and old have come without the town to receive the glad tidings of peace, which are brought by twelve youths, crowned with flowers and clad in flowing garments, who are advancing slowly down the road. One bears a scroll of parchment in his left hand, the others carry olive branches. Some of the people are on their knees, while others stand gazing upwards, in mute gratitude to Heaven. Here and there, those whom the cruel war has made widows and fatherless, indulge in silent grief, unable to participate in the universal joy. To the left appear the steeples and buildings of a town, and from a half ruined tower flies the white flag of peace. In the distance, to the right, troops are seen returning. A river, the Rhine, probably, winds its serpentine course through the distant landscape, dotted along its banks with towns and villages, and castled crags, and over all, in the blue sky, gleams the rainbow of promise.

Banquet of Queen Joanna Near Naples

At a table, covered with a damask cloth, on which are flowers, wines and sweetmeats, ladies and cavaliers are seated in various attitudes, all more or less careless. In the foreground, to the right of the spectator, sits Queen Joanna, a fair woman, of beautiful form and feature. She is clothed in white satin; some drapery of gold brocade is thrown across her lap, which is full of flowers, and the tip of her dainty attired foot rests on a richly covered stool. Her head is turned towards the gentlemen on her left, Prince Louis of Taranto, who, with his right hand on his heart, is evidently making some tender protestation. Behind the chairs of the Queen and her favorite stand two Moorish boys, holding fans of peacock feathers. To the left, a youth and maiden, in the costume of the Italian peasantry, are executing a national dance to the music of bagpipe and flute. In the background attendants are bringing in fruit, and on the extreme right of the picture a musician, seated on a stone fence, and two lazzaroni are eagerly gazing upon the festive scene. Between the vine-wreathed pillars, at the back of the table, we have a view of Vesuvius, and the blue waters of the far-famed Bay of Naples.

Queen Joanna reigned from 1343 to 1382. She was a beautiful, but unprincipled woman, who caused the murder of her first husband in 1345, and was married three times afterwards. She was suffocated by command of her cousin and adopted son, Charles of Durazzo, who was proclaimed King of Naples in 1382.

As he early evinced much taste and skill in painting, he was released from the plough and placed under the tuition of Juan de Roelas, where he soon acquired a considerable reputation. In 1650, he was sent for by King Philip to paint the Labors of Hercules, in the palace of Buenretiro. During the progress of the work, he was often visited by his royal patron, who on one occasion was pleased to express his admiration by laying his hand upon the artist's shoulder, and calling him "painter of the king, and king of painters." Zurbaran was of the naturalist school in light and shade and color, and is called the Spanish Cara-

In this picture the connoisseur recognizes at a glance the master hand of Murillo. The squalid attire and surroundings of the weird, witch-like creature, the attendant ape, fit companion for a being who appears scarcely human in her repulsive hideousness, are portrayed with wonderful art and expression, and reveal the touch of him, in whom "all the glories of Spanish art were united, as it were, into one focus." Murillo, like Rubens, the only master of his age that can be compared with him in talent,

"possessed an almost incredible fertility, a widely extended reputation, and most amiable qualities."

Bartholome Esteban Murillo was born in the little town of Pilas, near Seville, in 1618, and died in 1685.

This illustrious artist was born in the Val d'Arno in 1452, and evinced even in childhood a decided taste for the fine arts. Placed by his father under the guidance of Andrea Verrochio, he soon eclipsed that master, and his talents rapidly attracted the attention of the Florentine public. Leonardo's studies had not been confined to painting; he was an able sculptor and architect and an accomplished poet and musician. Joined to such vigor of intellect, was an elegance of feature and grace of manner which made him beloved by all and soon spread his fame through Italy. His famous work is his "Last Supper," painted for the refectory of the Dominican Convent of S. Maria delle Grazie at Milan, "a performance which history ranks amongst the most admirable productions of the art." Leonardo da Vinci expired at Fountainbleau on the 2nd day of May, 1519. Aged 67 years.

Peter Paul Rubens, the illustrious head of the Flemish School, the "consummate painter, enlightened scholar, skillful diplomatist and accomplished man of the world," was born at Cologne in 1577, on the Feast of St. Peter and St. Paul, from which circumstance he received his name. On reaching his twenty-third year, he went by advice of his friend and master, Otto Venius, to Italy, where he spent eight years. On his return he established himself at Antwerp, from where he went at different times to the Courts of France and Spain. Among his numerous magnificent paintings, the one by which he is most extensively known, is probably his famous "Descent from the Cross," which presents the highest excellence attained by the master in ecclesiastical art. On proceeding to Italy, he was, however, strongly influenced by the pictures of Peter van Laer (called Bamboccio), and attaching himself to the style of that master, he painted similar subjects with great success. He executed landscapes, chiefly of Italian character, enlivened with sheep and goats, "which are touched with a precision and beauty of pencil that has hardly seemed surpassed." Van der Does is said to have been of a gloomy, morose and fretful temperament, and his works seem to partake of the gloominess of his character. He died at The Hague in 1673.

Gallery of Paintings

David Teniers, born at Antwerp in 1610, received his first instruction in painting from his father, the elder Teniers; he afterwards studied under Adrian Brouwer, and is said to have been for some time the pupil of Rubens. The works of Teniers, although exceedingly numerous, are held in the highest estimation, and in subjects relating to common life, he is the greatest of Flemish painters. He died at Brussels in the year 1694, at the advanced age of 84.

Artist's Surprise Party

Joseph Van der Kerkhove, born at Bruges, in 1669, studied at Antwerp under Erasmus Quellinus, the younger. On leaving that master's studio, he set out for Italy; but on his way through France, he met with so much encouragement in Paris, that, abandoning his original project, he decided to remain in the latter city. After several years residence there, he returned to Bruges, where he received more commissions than he could execute. His principal work is a series of fifteen pictures of the Life of our Savior, painted for the Church of the Dominicans at Bruges. He died in his native city in 1714. The picture before us was painted during the artist's residence in Paris.

- A landscape, through which winds a river, its left bank quite thickly wooded. Two horsemen riding along the opposite shore have been surprised by a party of highwaymen, and some heavy firing is going on.
- John Wynants, born at Harlem in 1600, is esteemed one of the most distinguished landscape painters of his time, and the academy which he established has produced many of the ablest artists of the Dutch School. Little is known of his life, "his works, like those of Philip Wouverman, must form his history." His pictures, which are very valuable and of which he painted a large number, are to be found among all the best collections. He died in 1670.

This artist, the son of a goldsmith, was born at Leyden in 1635. Ambitious of imitating the style of Gerard Douw, he entered his studio, and soon became not only the ablest of his disciples, but is even considered by many the superior of that master. His works are exceedingly rare. He died in 1681.

In the foreground, horses, sheep and cattle, and several figures of men and boys. To the right, a farm house, shaded by trees, passing in front of which is a woman, carrying a load on her head, and holding a child by the hand. In the middle distance, two horsemen; to the left, a horseman and a pedestrian, side by side. Mountain scenery in the distance.

John Breughel was born at Brussels, in 1589, and died at Antwerp, in 1642. There were four painters of this name living about the same time. John Breughel was distinguished as the "Velvet Breughel," because he was generally dressed in velvet, an expensive habit, and one unusual for painters in those days.

HISTORY OF THE GALLERY

JUDGE E. B. and Mrs. Margaret E. Crocker erected in the City of Sacramento, California, the E. B. Crocker Art Gallery 1870-1873 to gratify their tastes. They gathered most of the Art Collection during their travels in Europe. The large collection of studies, drawings, etc., kept in portfolios and lockers, were secured from studios and collectors in Europe during the Franco-Prussian War.

In 1884 the California Museum Association was formed to gather a museum of art, natural history, etc., and to study matters related to the development of the resources of California.

To aid in securing a hall for its purposes, it gave an Art Loan Exhibition in the Art Gallery by the kindness of Mrs. Margaret E. Crocker, widow of Judge E. B. Crocker. It was so successful that in its midst Mrs. Crocker donated to the Association the building and all its contents. By the request of the Association Mrs. Crocker changed the gift so that it could be received by the City of Sacramento with the California Museum Association as a co-tenant and administrator. The city accepted the trust and the two bodies have ever since controlled the property jointly.

In honor of the donor of the Gallery the people shortly after the making of the deed, gave her a reception in the great Agricultural Pavilion, which for floral beauty, unanimity of participation and splendor of ceremony, has never been surpassed in the State. People and societies from all over the State participated and contributed to the features of the floral festival. An account of all this with paintings by California artists was bound in a unique volume of gold and Sutter Fort Oak, and, with another volume bound in silver and oak containing newspaper comments on the gift and festival, was presented to Mrs. Crocker.

The original gift included 160 feet on O Street, by 160 on Second Street. A few years later and shortly prior to her death, Mrs. Crocker gave an additional strip on the east marked by the west line of the residence property next to the Gallery.
